*In F and W2, the flat sigs on b and e in the D voice are apparently still in force, but W1 (f. 23' (27'), as well as concordances in M1 (W2) and M37 (F, W2), have no sigs for the opening of the ℣. ALLELUYA. EPULEMUR IN AZIMIS
[M15]

*The previous organum (Alleluya, Pascha nostrum [M14]), which uses the same T for its All. section as M15, has its entire T melody transposed down a fifth from the level seen in the Parisian chant sources. The organum setting of M15, on the other hand, presents the chant at its customary pitch. Furthermore, although Epulemur in azimis is most familiar as the second ℣ of M14 for the Mass All. on Easter Sunday, the M15 organum includes an All. section before the ℣. As Wright notes (Music and Ceremony, 263), the M15 chant (All. and ℣) also served independently as the Vespers responsory for both the Sunday after Easter and on Pascha annotinum; this latter ceremony commemorated the baptism of the cathecumens in the previous year.

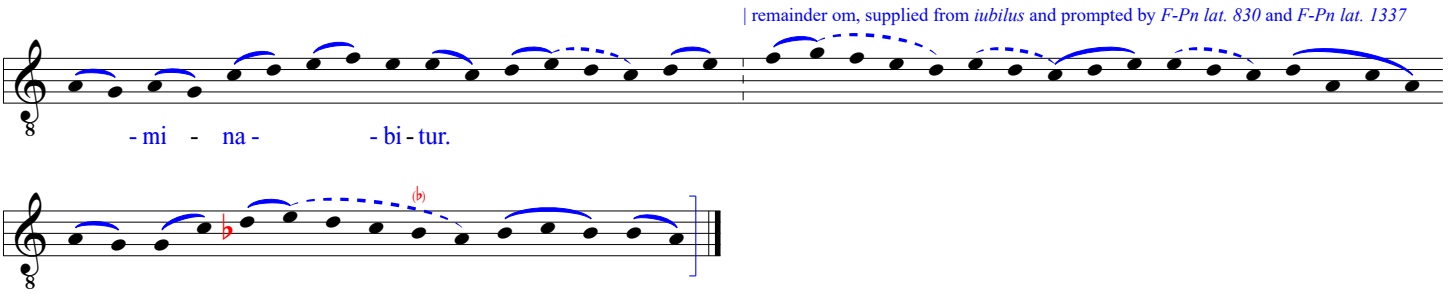
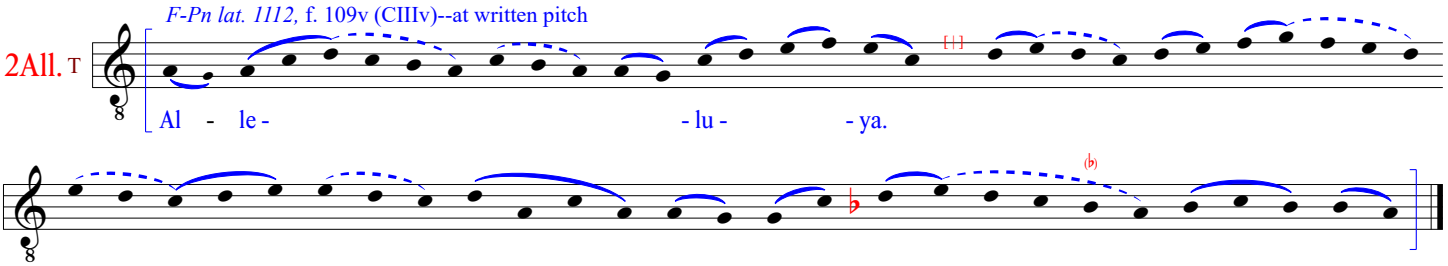
F-Pn lat. 1112, f. 109v (CIIIv)--at written pitch

non do -



(The T of the above ℣ is transposed up a fifth beginning with the word "mors," and this upward shift persists until the end of the organum, thus corresponding to the original pitch level of the chant, which had been lowered a fifth since the start of the opening All. section. As a result, the rendering of the 2All. below conforms to this newly transposed pitch level: a fifth higher than the T of the corresponding polyphonic All. section above; the 2All. may also be performed a fifth lower, at the pitch level in which the organum begins. For further information on this situation and some accommodations for performance that the shift may imply, see the remarks that follow the 2All. below.)



REMARKS ON TRANSPOSITION IN THE M18 ORGANUM AND IN OTHER ORGANA IN F

The state of the M18 organum in F is rather curious, since, as described above, the organum T begins shifted down a fifth from its typical pitch level in the chant sources (i.e., from a chant final on a to one in the organum on d). Towards the end of the ℣, though, beginning with the word "mors," the T then shifts up to the area of the chant MSS and remains at this higher location until the close of the organum. As a result, the M18 verse in F ends in a different tonal realm than it begins. Although one occasionally encounters entire ℟, All., ℣, and GP sections at different transposition levels within the organum repertory a2 and a3 (see below), this is the only instance I have seen in the Parisian repertory where a shift like this takes place within a major section of an organum. Interestingly, no comparable event happens in the partially concordant, fragmentary version of the M18 organum a2 in Si, which offers both its All. and ℣ sections on d -- even including the passages it shares with F after the shift in the latter source (i.e., everything except the discant section on "ultra"). Similarly, excluding the relevant portions of the F organum a2, the musically different but similarly higher-pitched Mors clausula a4, and their associated motets (nos. 258-259 and 254-257, respectively), all the polyphony connected with the M18 chant within the central "Notre Dame" sources is pitched at the lower, d-mode level, and thus disagrees with the indications in the majority of the chant MSS.

The Parisian chant MSS consulted for the transcription of M18 are oriented on a throughout, with the only exception being the opening portion of the transmission in F-Pn lat. 15181, f. 304v (CCXCIIIv). This particular redaction of M18 gives the music of the first syllable (i.e., the first 13 notes of the All. section) on d, and with the change of both system and clef that follows immediately thereafter, the remainder of the chant shifts to the higher level of a, where it stays through the end of the verse. This situation most likely implies a confusion in the choice of clefs for the opening or continuation of the chant (as there is evidence of erased and re-entered clefs on subsequent systems of this chant), but it may also intimate that the major components of the M18 chant were considered to be executable on either of the two pitch levels.

Such a scenario prompts questions as to how one might perform the F M18 organum a2 as it stands, since the internal shift expands the range of both D and T parts beyond the usual expectations in pieces of this type (to a twelfth -- c-g′ -- in the T, and an octave-plus-seventh -- d-c″ -- in the D), and this could challenge singers. Hence, if one wants to adhere strictly to the pitch levels of the verse as presented in the transcription above, it is conceivable that one might allot performers with a higher tessitura to the transposed segments of this organum. Alternatively, one could transpose the various sections of organum and chant so that they conform to the same pitch level throughout. In this case, the verse music starting with "mors" and the subsequent 2All. would be presented a fifth lower. Also possible -- whether the applicable sections of the verse are transposed or not -- the 2All. could be delivered at the lower transposition, either by using the opening polyphonic All. segment of the organum or the transposed monophonic continuation that follows it.

Besides M18 (Alleluya. Christus resurgens, f. 112r), the other organa transmitted in F that feature separately transposed sections include:
O10 (Non conturbetur. Ego rogabo, f. 71v) -- ℣, GP down a 5th in comparison to the chant;
O11 (Dum conplerentur. Repleti sunt, f. 72r) -- ℣ only, down a 5th;
O18 (Ad nutum. Ut vitium, f. 76v) -- ℟ only, down a 5th;
M28 (Priusquam te. Misit dominus, f. 119v) -- ℟ only, up a 2nd;
M30 (Constitues. Pro patribus, f. 121v) -- ℟ only, down a 2nd.

In contrast, the following examples are transposed throughout the entire course of the organum:
O5 (Gaude Maria. Gabrielem, a2, f. 68r [as well as the version a3 only in LoA, f. 74r -- text not entered -- and 94r]), down a 5th;
O9 ([Sedit angelus.] Crucifixum in carne, both in the two settings a2, F, ff. 70v and 71r, and the one a3, F, f. 25v [2,10]), down a 5th;
O20 (Maria. Cui proprium, f. 77v), down a 4th;
O33 (Repleti sunt. Loquebantur, f. 91v), down an octave;
M14 (Alleluya. Pascha nostrum, both the versions a3, f. 23r [2,8], and a2, f. 109r), down a 5th.

*Although Respondens autem is most familiar as the second ℣ of M20 for the Mass All. on Friday of Easter Week, the M21 organum includes an All. section before the ℣. As Wright notes (Music and Ceremony, 264), the M21 chant (All. and ℣) also served independently as the Vespers responsory for the same feast.
